What's in your wallet?

Not as much as there used to be, according to new report

Reuters

WASHINGTON U.S. households saw their wealth decline by more than a third between 2005 and 2010 as home values and share prices plummeted, leaving many with weak safety nets to weather a harsh economic environment.

The median household net worth dove 35 percent to $66,740 in the five-year period, the Census Bureau said in a report Monday. However, making comparisons with prior periods is difficult because of inflation adjustment issues.

"The overall decline in net worth reflects drops in housing values and stock market indices," Census Bureau economist Alfred Gottschalck said.

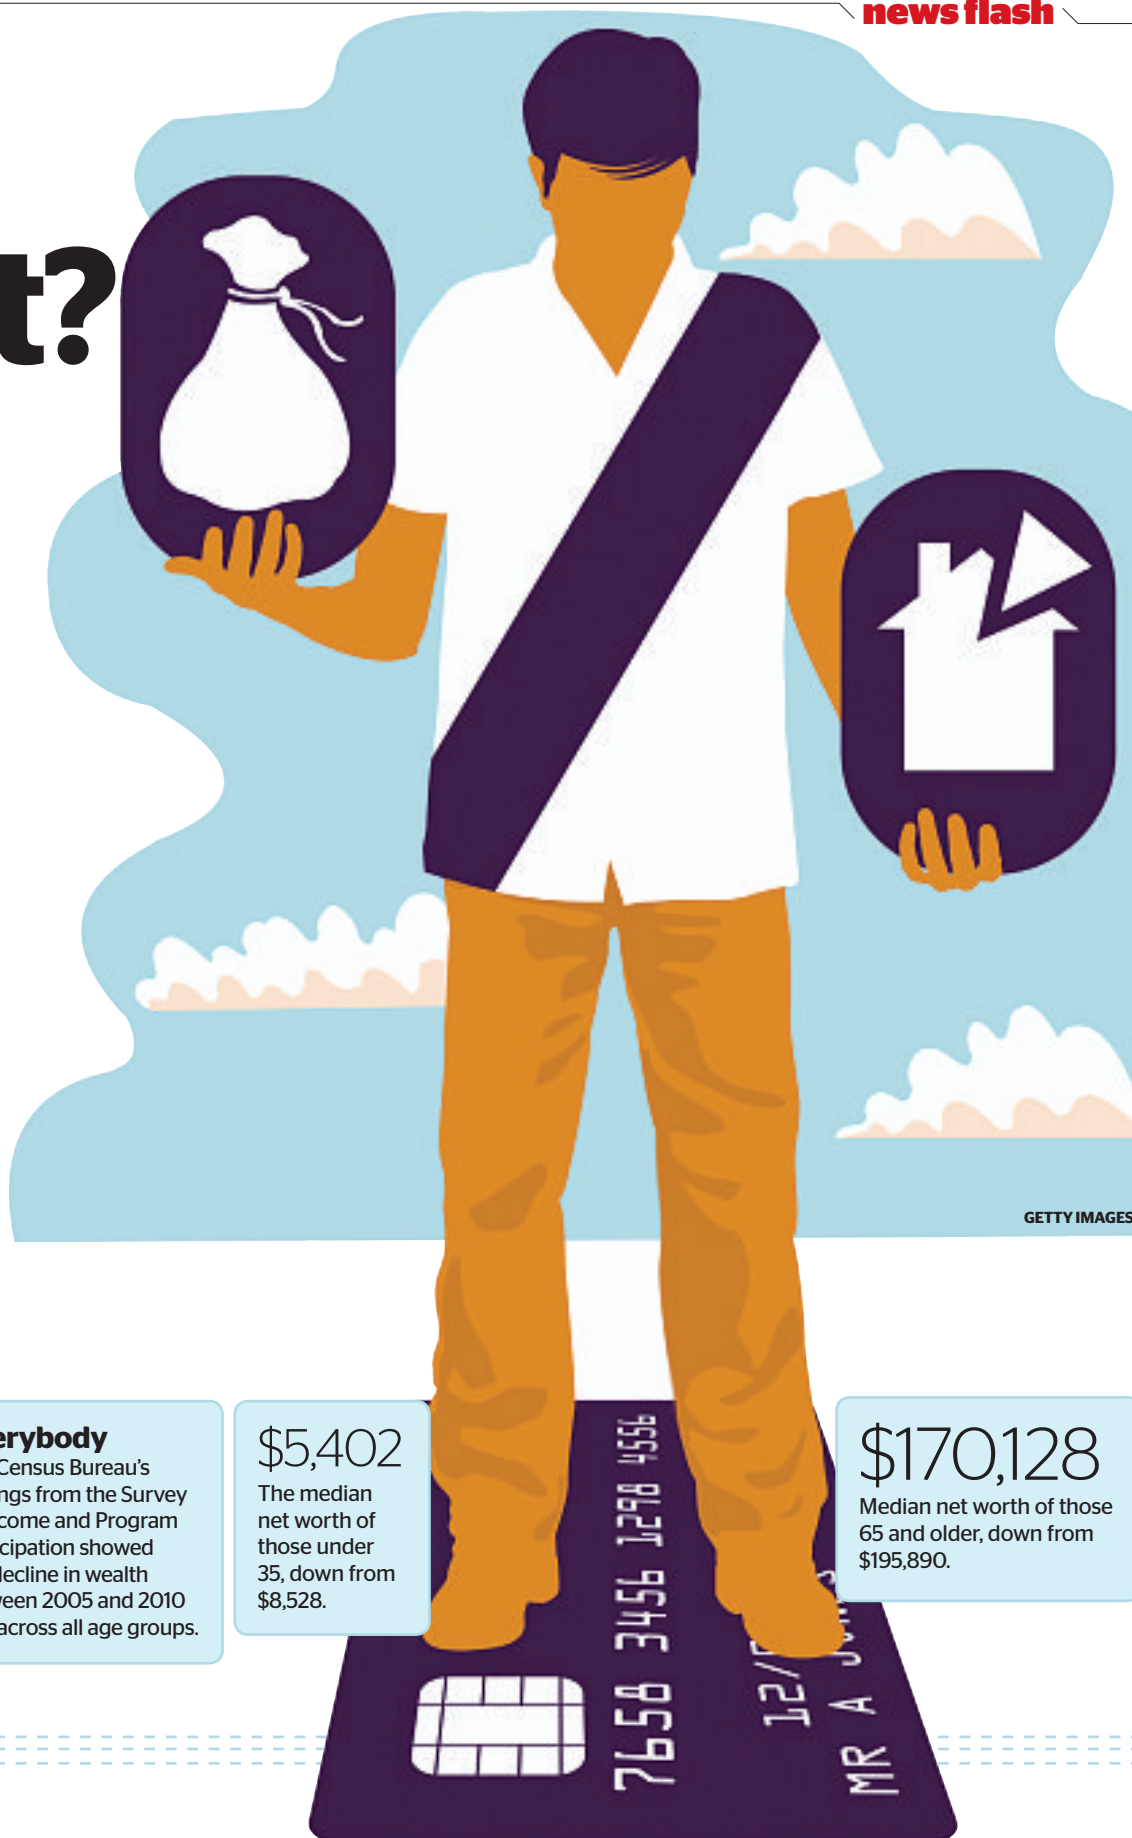

The median household net worth, which is the value of assets minus debt, was $102,844 in 2005, in 2010 constant dollars. However, the median household net worth excluding home equity increased 8 percent to $15,000 between 2009 and 2010.

Federal Reserve data last week showed Americans suffered a record decline in wealth between 2007 and 2010, with median family net worth dropping 38 percent to $77,300.

That decline was blamed on house prices, which have dropped sharply from their 2005 peak.

Net worth provides a backstop for households during periods of economic uncertainty and family crisis. Declining wealth means that households have had little resources to draw on during the recession and the economy's lackluster recovery.

"If someone loses their job and they have high enough accumulated wealth they can use that to bridge the gap between losing their job and finding work again," Gottschalck said. Here's a closer look at the numbers.

GETTY IMAGES

2007 to 2009

The recovery from the 2007-09 recession has been weak by historic standards, with the pace of economic growth insufficient to bring down unemployment.

8.2%

The unemployment rate is at 8.2 percent and has been stuck above 8 percent since February 2009.

Everybody

The Census Bureau's findings from the Survey of Income and Program Participation showed the decline in wealth between 2005 and 2010 was across all age groups.

$5,402

The median net worth of those under 35, down from $8,528.

$170,128

Median net worth of those 65 and older, down from $195,890.

DEGREES OF SEPARATION

All education groups suffered declines in wealth. The median income for households with a high school diploma fell 39 percent and dropped 32 percent for those with a bachelor's degree. Net worth remains high among households with more education.

Graduates and professionals

In 2010, households with a graduate or professional degree had a median net worth of $245,763.

Bachelor's

Households with a bachelor's degree had a median net worth of $142,518 during that period.

High school

The median net worth of those with a high school diploma only was $42,223, the survey found.

CTA Groupon deal not just for tourists

GOING PUBLIC

Tracy Swartz

 tschwartz@tribune.com
 @tracyswartz

CTA riders, it's time to replace those Chicago Cards with new passes—but just for a few days.

The CTA announced last week it is partnering with Chicago daily deal site Groupon to offer discounted three-day unlimited travel passes—typically $14—for $9. The deal should be available later this month, the CTA said.

CTA President Forrest Claypool said he hopes the deal, which will generate nearly $2 million for the agency, will encourage visitors and infrequent riders to explore the city using trains and buses. But Going Public believes it's the regular riders who should take advantage of this deal.

Many riders probably have Chicago Cards tucked in their purses and wallets. It's easy to wave them in front of the fare reader without thinking how much money is being spent each day on transit.

It costs $2 per bus trip and $2.25 per rail ride with the Chicago Card. If riders used their Chicago Card to travel on trains to and from work for three days, they would spend $13.50. If riders used the $9 unlimited travel pass being offered through Groupon for the same travel, they would save $4.50.

That doesn't include any extra travel a rider may endure—errands, a Cubs game, the gym, etc. The unlimited pass would cover all that travel for the cost of the $9 card.

After the deal was announced, some riders said on Twitter that when the unlimited pass became available for purchase, they would buy the card for their friends or family visiting town. That's a good plan—but save a card or two for yourself.

There's a purchase limit of four passes per person, the CTA said. The cards, which will be mailed to recipients, can be used for up to a year.

This is a one-time deal between CTA and Groupon but there may be similar deals in the future, the CTA said.

Red alert

The CTA is holding public meetings about the five-month Red Line shutdown next year. Riders can voice their opinions Thursday in the Kennedy-King College gym, 6343 S. Halsted St. The meeting will run from 6-8 p.m.

A Shore thing

The Chicago Department of Transportation is holding a meeting about the recommendations for improving transit from 22nd Street to 95th Street east of the Dan Ryan Expressway. The meeting will be held 6-8 p.m. June 28 at Apostolic Church of God, 6320 S. Dorchester Ave.

STATIONARY

 It's been about 15 months since Sally Katona-King, a 68-year-old CTA rider, died after she was allegedly pushed down the stairs at the Fullerton stop in an iPhone robbery gone wrong. A suspect, 17, faces felony murder and robbery charges stemming from the incident. Meanwhile, iPhone use is still prevalent at this station and along the Red Line, GP has noticed. Riders should take more care with how and when they use their phones. Four members of the Guardian Angels, a volunteer CTA patrol group, were stabbed last month as they tried to prevent a cellphone theft on the Red Line. Let's not forget the tragedy of Katona-King and the steps that can be taken to prevent future tragedies by using caution when using cellphones.

FEEL THE BURN

TOO HOT TO WORK OUT? IN CHICAGO, IT DEPENDS WHO'S SWEATING IT UP

From news services

You know the type.

The runner who hits the lakefront path even when it's hot enough to fry an egg there. The cyclist who insists on biking to work when the mercury drops well below freezing. The cardio nut who splashes through sprints despite the downpours.

Chicago, home to bone-chilling lows and scorching highs, blustering winds and blinding rain, is no stranger to the all-weather fitness junkie. But this week, as temperatures are forecast to top 90 degrees through Thursday—with humidity readings that will make it feel hotter than 100 degrees some days—hard-core runners and other athletes will really be put to the test. Whether those who still pound the pavement are committed fitness gods or just plain crazy all depends on your point of view.

Bike messenger Luke Snobeck, 28, of Humboldt Park, can see the bright side of being out and about when the temperature approaches triple digits. At least it's not winter, right?

"I do prefer 70-degree weather, but the heat is favorable compared to what we could have," Snobeck said. "The heat gives a little better workout with more sweat, as long as you keep drinking water."

But for Kerri Adams, 28, of Ravenswood, the idea of an extreme-heat workout is a bit ridiculous—especially when air conditioning is an option.

"I find them charming," Adams said of the people who work out in extreme heat outdoors. "They seem like simple animals running around."

When indoor options are available, she said, hot weather isn't an excuse to skip a workout.

Experts say heat can help your workout, boosting circulation and increasing flexibility, but it's a relationship that also can turn nasty.

"Your body is engineered to exercise in the heat," said Michele Olson, professor of exercise science at Auburn University at Montgomery, Ala. "This is why we sweat."

The evaporation of sweat from the skin is the mechanism that cools our bodies to maintain our normal body temperature.

Heat also speeds up the heart rate, increasing the circulation of blood around the body, including the muscles, decreasing friction and making it more comfortable to stretch, she said.

"This is why we warm up before exercise," Olson said.

Heat-related illnesses that strike during a sport or recreational activity send nearly 6,000 people in the U.S. to emergency rooms every year, according to a report released in 2011 by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

"If it is too humid, sweat cannot evaporate and this can prove dangerous, causing a heat injury, such as dehydration, heat cramps or heat stroke," Olson said.

When Kay Kay Clivio teaches her hot yoga class at Pure Yoga in New York City, she likes to keep the room between 95 and 100 degrees.

"Heat has a healing, therapeutic aspect," she said. "The hot room opens your muscles more and makes you more flexible."

Students in her hot class are encouraged to drink plenty of water and take breaks as needed.

"It's not usual to get nauseous in the first classes. Heat turns up a lot of toxins. Like steam cleaning a carpet, it really dredges stuff up. So the body reacts," Clivio said. "A lot of the benefit is that you're detoxifying."

Besides flushing toxins and increasing flexibility, Clivio said heat can reduce stress and even sharpen the mind.

"It pushes you out of your comfort zone," she said.

Cedric X. Bryant, chief science officer of the American Council on Exercise, said athletes should take into account temperature and humidity when deciding where and when to workout.

When ambient temperature is 90 degrees or more and the humidity is 60 percent or more, he said, exercise should be indoors.

At 90 degrees and 30 percent humidity you'd still be able to exercise safely, he said, depending of the intensity of the workout, which determines how much heat is produced.

"Generally speaking, if the temperature is 80 degrees Fahrenheit and humidity is below 50 percent, that's going to be pretty comfortable," Bryant said.

Acclimatization, the gradual adaptation to environmental changes such as heat, also can reduce risk of injury, according to Bryant. The body usually takes 10 to 14 days of heat-exposed exercise to adapt.

To beat the heat, adequate hydration before, during and after exercise is a must.

Bryant recommends drinking lots of fluids 30 minutes before exercise, drinking at least 6 ounces every 20 minutes during exercise and drinking beyond thirst after exercise.

"Water is generally best," he said. "But consider a sports drink if you're going to exercising for more than an hour."

Upside to this heat? Cool rain on the way

Chicago Tribune

You know that miserable, sweat bead-inducing humidity gripping the Chicago area this week? It might eventually lead to cooling rainstorms.

Chicagoland has seen well below-average levels of rain since January, and the unusually dry weather makes it harder for the atmosphere to bring in a good rain, National Weather Service meteorologist Jamie Enderlen said.

But moist air from the Gulf of Mexico is making this week's dew points higher—translating to muggy conditions for Chicagoans.

"We've had a number of storm systems approaching and fizzling out," rainra said. "This surge of moisture will be something to work with. Hopefully we'll get a good round of rain this week."

That's little consolation in the meantime. This week's predicted heat will feel much different from last week's, she said. Last week's 90-degree temperatures felt like 90s, but this week's high 90s will feel more like 100-degree weather because of the humidity. On Monday, for example, the weather service predicted a high of 97 degrees but said the humidity would make it feel like 103. The final reading was 94 degrees.

NO SPLASHING

As temperatures and humidity soared Monday, 10 of the Chicago Park District's 50 pools remained closed for repairs. The Park District kicked off pool season Friday but kept 12 closed in light of $8 million worth of repairs to meet new state standards, spokeswoman Jessica Maxey-Faulkner said. Pools that remain closed have signs directing patrons to the nearest open pool, she said.

"We're tapping into more moist air this week," Enderlen said. "Last week's heat wasn't overbearing because we had lower dew points. When you factor in this week's dew points, it's going to be pretty steamy out there."

Temperatures are expected to cool off into the low 80s by Thursday, Enderlen said, with a chance of showers and thunderstorms possible by the end of the week.

Pot plan issues remain

Chicago Tribune

An influential Chicago alderman said Monday he's not yet ready to sign off on Mayor Emanuel's proposal to decriminalize the possession of small amounts of marijuana.

Although Ald. Edward Burke (14th) didn't rule out backing the mayor's plan, the veteran City Council member said he needs to know far more about when police will write tickets instead of making arrests.

"If you run across somebody that's violating the law and you want to write them a ticket as opposed to taking them into custody, and that person has no identification, how do you write the ticket?" Burke asked after a speech at the City Club of Chicago.

Under Emanuel's proposal, which a Council committee could hear as soon as Thursday, police would have the option of writing tickets for possession of 15 grams of pot or less. Fines would range from $100 to $500.

That could generate millions in city revenue and potentially give beat cops more time on the street to deal with more serious issues.

Police, however, still could enforce state statute and make arrests, and Burke wants to know when they are going to use that discretion.

Pot decriminalization was first suggested last year by Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle, who said low-income people and minorities are arrested for pot possession in disproportionate numbers.

Ald. Daniel Solis (25th) agreed and put a proposal before the council that Emanuel plans to modify and support.

Ald. Patrick O'Connor (40th), the mayor's council floor leader, said he expects the proposal to win approval, if not by a huge margin.

"I think there will be a lot of personal involvement in this vote," O'Connor said, noting some aldermen may be influenced by knowing people who have had drug problems.

A 29-year-old woman has been cited in a Sunday crash that left nine cars damaged and knocked down two trees and several sign posts on the city's North Side. The incident occurred near Fullerton Avenue and Southport Avenue, said Police News Affairs Officer Laura Kubiak.

Google shocked by censorship requests

Western governments, including the U.S., appear to be stepping up efforts to censor Internet search results and YouTube videos, according to a "transparency report" released by Google.

"It's alarming not only because free expression is at risk, but because some of these requests come from countries you might not suspect—Western democracies not typically associated with censorship," Dorothy Chou, a senior policy analyst at Google, wrote in a blog post Sunday night.

"For example, in the second half of last year, Spanish regulators asked us to remove 270 search results that linked to blogs and articles in newspapers referencing individuals and public figures, including mayors and public prosecutors."

ABOUT THE REPORT

The biannual transparency report, which includes data to July 2009, also indicates a rise in world governments' requests to take a look at the data Google collects about its users. And with those requests, Google tended to be much more likely to comply.

In the last half of 2011, U.S. agencies asked Google to remove 6,192 individual pieces of content from its search results, blog posts or archives of online videos, according to the report.

That's up 718 percent compared with the 757 such items U.S. agencies asked Google to remove in the six months prior.

HOLLOWS CUT DEEPER IN SOPHOMORE ALBUM

Andy Downing

Hollows kept things light on their self-titled debut, bashing through an array of catchy summer-ready tunes steeped in '80s girl-group pop and melodic garage-rock. The hooks on the sophomore album "Vulture" are still hummable, but the cut deeper with lyrics that touch on grown-up subjects like heartbreak and loss. In that regard, it's of little surprise to hear singer/organist Maria Jenkins wrote many of the songs while nursing a breakup and dealing with a family illness.

Reached at home in Homewood Park, Jenkins, 24, opened up about "Vulture's" more personal turn, her short attention span and what it's like to form a band.

Single of the Week: Vulture

Last time around you had a beach single ("Hot Sand") ready to roll for summer and it ended up getting delayed until the fall. Did you avoid writing any seasonal songs this time around just in case?

[Laughs.] It wasn't too much of a thought, but yeah, the beach single that came out in November was kind of an

COMPROMISING POSITIONS

Will the Cubs and Sox look drastically different in a few weeks?

RedEye

The latest round of the Crosstown Classic is under way at U.S. Cellular Field. And while the home of the White Sox is known for fireworks, there might be more off the field than on in the next few months.

The Cubs are buried in last place and might trade several high-profile players, including pitchers Ryan Dempster and Matt

Garza, both of whom are pitching against the Sox this week.

Rumors persist that a deal for Dempster could be getting close, with Boston and the L.A. Dodgers apparently the strongest suitors. But that was before Dempster was placed on the 15-day disabled list Tuesday with lat tightness, which could stall a potential deal.

The Cubs would be willing to eat most of Dempster's remaining $8 million salary if the trading partner would part with more and better minor league talent, according to ESPN's Buster Olney. That means the Cubs are more desperate to build up their minor leagues than they are to save money.

As for Garza, the rumor mill is quieter but apparently with the same suitors.

On the South Side, the Sox are in position to make a playoff push, and GM Kenny Williams is known for bold moves. It remains to be seen whether he feels major changes should be made, perhaps to bolster the starting rotation.

In the meantime, other Chicago sports teams have been busy off the ice, field and court.

STAYING

The Blackhawks have re-signed forwards

Brandon Bollig and Ben Smith and goaltender Carter Hutton. Bollig and Smith each inked two-year deals Monday while Hutton signed for one year. The Hawks also released goalie Alexander Salak. Bollig, 25, made his NHL debut in 2011-12, taking over as the team's enforcer after John Scott was traded. During the past two seasons, Smith, 23, has played in 19 regular-season games and seven in the postseason.

COMPROMISING

The season-long labor struggle between the Arena Football League and the Players Union is over.

After both sides came to an agreement on a term sheet, the owners approved the outline of a collective bargaining agreement Sunday night. The full-length CBA will be signed Wednesday.

"Hopefully, it's good for everyone and it won't cost the league so much where they have to go bankrupt and we will be playing for years and years," Chicago Rush player rep Reggie Gray said.

1 How is a Cubs-Sox night game different from a day game in this rivalry?	Smartphones make the Cubs fans look like they're doing Conan's "In The Year 2000" skit.	Starlin Castro sorta tries in night games.	Safer commute home for Sox fans at Wrigley. All six of 'em already live on the North Side.	Night games bring you closer to sleeping—and forgetting about how bad the Cubs played.	There is no difference. The d-bags still wear their sunglasses at night.
2 Why are Cubs fans booing Alfonso Soriano THIS time?	He was named to the all-city team until Cubs fans realized they misheard the word "city."	They're not booing. They're saying, "Marbury v. Madison established judicial revieweeeeeew."	He tweeted the ending to "Fifty Shades of Grey."	Why did Kelly and Dylan never stick it through on "90210"? Questions unanswered.	Because on the back of his jersey it STILL says Soriano.
3 Why is Carlos Marmol closing for the Cubs again?	The king of the wild pitches? Well, if you can't beat 'em, groin 'em.	Theo's stats show walks are an undervalued commodity.	Closers come in to finish the game for a team win, so, he don't know either.	Why lose 100 games when you can lose 112?!	Because Kerry Wood smart-ened up and retired.
4 What will Jake Peavy and Chris Sale do with their extra rest this week?	What am I, their concierge?	"Girls" marathon.	Hopefully not bath salts.	Doing extra research on the Greek/EU fiscal rehab. What else would they be doing?	Watch a replay of Phil Humber's perfect game and wonder what the hell has happened since.
5 What would you do if you won the BP Crosstown Cup?	I can't tell you because it would be crude.	Demand a trade.	"Borrow" some BP gas and ride back crosstown to the South Side.	Fill with BP gas, pour on eyes, light on fire. My eyes = No more Marmol.	Put my drank in my cup and get crunk!

RedEye

Knockout or punch line?

According to The Associated Press, Mike Tyson announced Monday that he will team up with Spike Lee to bring his one-man show, "Mike Tyson: Undisputed Truth," to Broadway for six shows starting July 31 to Aug. 5.

The show—a confessional on the highs and lows of Tyson's life—was a hit in Las Vegas. On that note, these sports figures could make it in New York too.

Jim Cornelison

His voice—starting with his powerful renditions of the national anthem—should be heard outside Chicago. He could be singing "Happy Birthday" for all we care; just give this guy a microphone.

Tim Tebow

The N.Y. Jets quarterback is a shoo-in for the lead in "Jesus Christ Superstar."

Lance Briggs

His affinity for comic books is well-known. Isn't it time he put on a costume and strutted onstage? Just stay away from "Spider-Man: Turn Off the Dark," Lance. The Bears need you injury-free.

Starlin Castro

Audiences will be mesmerized by clips of the Cubs shortstop's miscues—including the ones that don't make it on the stat sheet. We'd call it "A Comedy of Errors," but it might be more tragic than funny.

L.A. Angels vs. San Francisco

It makes sense that the Angels ballpark is so clean—after all, cleanliness is next to godliness. And heaven is the theme for this Anaheim park. The stadium is easily accessible by train, but if you would rather drive in trafficky L.A., parking is very cheap. Compared with Dodger Stadium, there are fewer crowds, which means fewer lines and fewer headaches. It also means fewer Angels fans. There seemed to be more Giants fans than Angels fans, which makes them easy prey.

ALBUM REVIEW

The Idler Wheel ...
Fiona Apple

By Jessica Galliard

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

I can relate to Fiona Apple. I'm not saying we're kindred spirits or anything. My voice sounds roughly like a basement full of cats. I've never been accused of having an eating disorder, and MTV didn't ban a video of me writhing around in my underwear.

But, as Apple will tell you on her new album out Tuesday, "every night is a fight with my brain."

This lady is desperate for relief—from herself. She's desperate to open the floodgates and move on to the next batch of emotions. It's desperation recognizable to a writer—like, me, for example—attempting to spit out and piece together some intelligent thoughts about an emotional roller coaster of an album, which honestly left me in a bit of a haze after the first listen and continues to mind[bleep] me into couch comas, depending on the day I give it another spin.

Seven years after "Extraordinary Machine" mesmerized the fanbase built from the 1999 hit album "When the Pawn ...," Apple, 34, has created her fourth full-length album, "The Idler Wheel is Wiser than the Driver of the Screw and Whipping Cords will Serve you More than Ropes will ever do." The queen of uncomfortable ballads and anthems throughout the early '00s doesn't change strategy much on 10 new tracks, but she does remove what little restraint she had in the past to challenge fans and listeners more than ever.

The result? A twisted, shameless-butregretful display of how to simultaneously accept and reject every flaw and bad decision in your life.

"The Idler Wheel ..." is like one gaping, permanent wound dressed up in a kitschy Band-Aid with birds on it. If you work really hard at not paying attention to the album's extremely dark and hopeless lyrics, you might think it's, dare I say, whimsical. Catchy. Beautiful.

The compositions and melodies, though layered over crushingly revealing lyrics, maintain a playful tone throughout the album—think bouncy pianos, marimbas, soft drum beats—and further drive home the titular idea that the line between sadness and madness often blurs. Apple wants you to feel uncomfortable with the level of vulnerability and brutal honesty she exhibits, especially in tracks like "Left Alone," which opens with a toe-tapping jazz drum and piano sequence and transitions into a chugging piece about contradicting desires to be loved and, you guessed it, left alone: "I don't cry when I'm sad anymore / How can I ask anyone to love me? / When all I do is beg to be left alone."

What specifically does she want? It's hard to tell, but then again, Apple doesn't really know either. She grasps for connection ("Valentine") and for companionship ("Anything we Want"), like most of us ultimately do, but her truest desires seem to get torpedoed by her brain ("Every Single Night"). It doesn't really sound all that "mad" or crazy or difficult to relate to, does it?

It's ugly and emotional and uncomfortable. Apple isn't the first female songwriter to let blood trickle into a song, but she is one of few to master the art of twisting her gorgeous looks, voice and arrangements with the beautiful sadness in her lyrics and her ugly feelings.

People might pay how much to see 'Dark Knight Rises'?!

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

It's the middle of the night, you're waiting in an insanely long line and there are a bunch of people dressed in crazy outfits. You could only be one of two places: outside a River North club, or at a midnight movie premiere. We happen to think the latter is much more fun, but fans might be taking it too far with "Dark Knight Rises." MTV and a quick eBay search reveal some IMAX midnight screenings of the new Batman flick, out July 20, are going for up to $150 for two tickets. Sorry, Christian Bale, but for that kind of cash, we're expecting some pretty amazing stuff. We broke down the financials on what we'd be willing to pay for an amped-up Batman experience. # JOKER'S ON YOU

Anne Hathaway and Michelle Pfeiffer get into a fight over who's the better Catwoman. This is worth only $20 because we obviously know who wins. (Hint: It's not Anne.)

Pfeiffer

$50

Joseph Gordon-Levitt as Robin. Yes, yes, we know it didn't go all that well for Chris O'Donnell, but there are far fewer rubber nipples in this flick.

Gordon-Levitt

$250

All those bridges in Pittsburgh are exploded in real life, not just through the magic of CGI. What, like you want those Steelers fans to be able to get to Chicago in the fall?

$150

Free Icees for life, in our flavor of choice. Some days you're in the mood for cherry, but other times, you just can't beat blue raspberry. Oh, and nachos too.

$500

All tickets come with a complimentary Batboat ride to Jamaica, good for reimbursement in the next year. You know you're already plotting your escape from the Chicago winters too.

Ledger

$10,000

The Joker bursts through a wall, revealing the fact that Heath Ledger has been alive and in hiding this entire time. Much like Tupac.

“They was talkin’ good to me. They was talkin’ like I was talkin’ and I liked that.”

—Chief Keef, to MTV, revealing that he has signed a record deal with Interscope. Earlier this month, Kanye West re-mixed the South Side teen’s viral hit “I Don’t Like.”

It’s a boy!
Giuliana and Bill Rancic announced at a baby shower over the weekend that they are expecting a baby boy via surrogate, eonline.com reports. Guests were given the choice of pink or blue treats at the event as a way of casting their vote on the gender of the highly anticipated reality baby.

Lesson learned
Kim Kardashian told Oprah Winfrey she fell into a deep depression after the end of her blink-and-you-missed-it marriage to Kris Humphries. But, she told Winfrey on “Oprah’s Next Chapter”: “I’m not the type to sit and beat myself up over [past mistakes]. If a real lesson was learned, I’m so OK with having experienced that.”

HOT DATE
SEPT. 25
That’s the premiere date for “The Office” star Mindy Kaling’s new Fox sitcom, “The Mindy Project,” ew.com reports. It will follow the Season 2 opener of “New Girl.”

Hungry man

Do we hear a challenge? “I think my character would destroy Teen Wolf,” Joe Manganiello said Monday when RedEye’s Matt Pais asked which onscreen werewolf he’d want his “True Blood” werewolf, Alcide, to battle. “I wouldn’t want to see that one go down. ... Kate Beckinsale isn’t really a werewolf, but I would like to be in a scene with Kate Beckinsale.”

Hellloooo, Shia
Call him Shia LaBuff. The “Transformers” star—real name: Shia LaBeouf, as if you needed reminding—took it all off for Icelandic band Sigur Ros’ new video, “Fjogur Piano,” which leaves absolutely nothing to the imagination. You’ve come a long way since “Even Stevens,” haven’t you, buddy?
